Selection Considerations

When choosing a supplier, consider:

- Fiber type: Single-mode (SM) for long-distance, multimode (MM) for short-distance or high-bandwidth applications.
- Connector type and polish: LC, SC, FC, ST; PC, UPC, APC polish affects return loss and performance.
- Customization: Length, jacket material (PVC, LSZH), and environmental resistance (UV, bend-insensitive).
- Production scale and lead time: Larger factories in China can handle high-volume orders efficiently, while North American suppliers may offer faster support and quality assurance . By evaluating these factors and sourcing from established suppliers in North America or China, you can ensure reliable, high-performance fiber optic patch cords for your network infrastructure.
